Pr. Narumol Nirathron, Ph.D., Thammasat University, Bangkok is active member of ATD Thailand and a former president of Friends of ATD Foundation in Thailand. She is the coordinator and editor of this work, which introduces us to the findings of social scientist

Professor Jona M. Rosenfeld, Ph.D., from Meyers-Brookdale Institute of Research (Israël). Pr. Rosenfeld has devoted his career to research and teaching into an understanding of the poor. Meeting ATD Fourth World founder Joseph Wresinki forty years ago utterly convinced him that 'Families living in extreme poverty and exclusion have a contribution to bring.' One of the outcomes of this collaboration is a method for practitioners and professionals of social work to learn from their experiences -whether successful or not- and to gain knowledge that can be put into action. This is the first part of the book. (For more information, read Emergence from extreme poverty, Science & Service Fourth World Publications, 1989)

For the case studies from Thailand presented in the second part, families in two communities in Bangkok, Thai members and permanent volunteers of ATD Fourth World have put their voices together to share their understanding of what it means to experience extreme poverty in Thailand.
